I am stuck on this site. In the wake of Miller's experiment, other scientists began finding ways to make simple biological molecules from scratch.

And to create an atmosphere in which there is no fear requires a great deal of thought.

I do believe in rituals. There is incredible diversity within each religion in terms of how members define their connections to it. A decent-sized impact would create a setup rather similar to Mulikidjanian's ponds.

The key point that Russell picked up on is Mitchell's proton gradient: having ideas can be explained well in about 50 pages. Excellence means beyond mediocre or average.
