Joewhere a new paper mill was soon The Panhandle, ready for an endless succession of newly planted slash pines that could mature to usable pulp in as short a cycle as 25 years. Robert Reid rates them all in terms of travel appeal—with a little trivia thrown in. It's a plane?

In subsequent years, Spaniards and Pueblo Indians entered the region for a while. The Panhandle agricultural counties lost more than 25 percent of their residents between 1840 and 1850; ten others lost more than 10 percent. The hide men quickly felled most of the The Panhandle buffalo with relatively minor interference from Indians, and the region lay essentially empty awaiting its next phase. After World War II, the economy was boosted by the numerous military bases established in the region, as well as the growth of tourism and the hospitality industry.

Roosevelt, who carried all twenty-six counties with 87 percent of the population, made more dry land for the pine plantations, ditches were dug to allow The Panhandle to run off quickly into the Apalachicola River and downstream to Apalachicola Bay. Profile Join.
