In music for these illustrations, as Mussorgsky called them, he represented [chicks], children, Baba Yaga in her wooden house on chicken legs, catacombs, gates, and even rattling carts. Hartmann, V. He also engraved it, aware of the wonderful potential afforded by this medium, in vast and populous series, forever communicating with his alternative creative processes.

This work, is, once again, reinserted for the time of the exhibition. La Salle
They are not empty but rather full of absences and things that are lacking, blank pages and closed doors on the threshold of which anything can happen, images and stories that occasionally stand apart from the ordinary through an ah-ha effect that occurs once the work itself has already taken place. The written archives are made up of more than documents.
