Each participant rents a private studio, as both a residence and a creative workspace. Part film, part video game, it's incredibly impressive, and builds a complicated, stunning alternate-reality that we're still navigating. Sledgehammer writers had until midnight Sunday to return to Backspace with their story and photographic proof they visited each location. Both new and experienced writers have won our contests. Laurie Hertz is senior editor for books at the Star Tribune, where she has won Tribune Recommends.
